Explore the Fantastical Karst Landforms of Southwest China

"In every walk with nature one receives far more than he seeks."

—John Muir, "John of the Mountains"

Nestled like a rippling jewel in the southwest of China, the province of Guizhou is known for its rolling hills and verdant mountainous terrain. Among all of the breathtaking scenery that this province has to offer, none are more fantastical or magnificent than the Karst mountains and caves.

The term "karst" refers to a type of topography that is formed when soluble rocks, such as limestone, dolomite, and gypsum, are gradually worn away by rainfall, lakes, rivers or other flowing water. Typically this weathering produces sinkholes and caves but, when the water is acidic enough, it can wear down limestone bedrock, which results in the formation of Karst mountains. After millions of years of erosion, the landscape in Guizhou province has been blessed by the spectacular landforms that we see today.

Highlights

The Forest of Ten Thousand Peaks

A landscape unlike any other awaits those who are curious enough to wander deep into the lesser-known countryside of Guizhou province. Known poetically as Wanfenglin or “The Forest of Ten Thousand Peaks”, this breathtaking landscape is so-named because the verdant Karst mountains scattered across its expanse are so plentiful that they give the appearance of a strange and beautiful forest. From February to April, the area is blanketed in rich golden hues as the rape flowers blossom, which adds an extra layer of beauty to the region.

As far back as the Ming Dynasty (1368-1644), the renowned geographer Xu Xiake decided to pay a visit to this unusual landscape and praised it highly, stating: “There are many peaks and mountains in this world, but only here can the peaks be truly called a forest.” If anything, Xu Xiake’s praise might be an understatement, as this stony “forest” is made up of nearly 20,000 peaks! ## Highlights

Zhangjiajie National Forest Park

The landscape of the Zhangjiajie National Forest Park has attracted admiration throughout the world, in part thanks to its inclusion in James Cameron's cinematic epic Avatar. Yet there's far more to these incredible mountains than what you may have seen on the silver screen!

Embedded deep within the subtropical forests of northwestern Hunan province, the Zhangjiajie National Forest Park is home to a dizzying collection of 243 peaks and over 3,000 sandstone pinnacles, which naturally dominate the landscape.

The Avatar Hallelujah Mountain can be found in a section of the park known as Yuanjiajie, which offers breath-taking panoramic views of the surrounding mountains and thus ranks as the most popular part of the park. While seeing the panoramic view from the top of Yuanjiajie will undoubtedly take your breath away, the view from the bottom of the mountains is certainly no less magnificent. Be forewarned, however, that the area around the stream is inhabited by wild macaques, so be sure not to monkey around or you might attract some unwanted attention! ## Highlights

Maling River Gorge

Carved into the rock over millions of years by the surging Maling River, the Maling River Gorge is about 75 kilometers (47 mi) and has an average depth of between 200 to 400 metres (656-1312 ft.). This ethereal landscape is home to around 100 waterfalls, which are all at least 100 metres (328 ft.) in height. The most famous of these are the Pearl Waterfall and the Rainbow Waterfall.

The Pearl Waterfall is so-named because it is located on a high cliff, meaning that its droplets are often dispersed by the wind and give the appearance of sparkling pearls floating in the air. By contrast, the Rainbow Waterfall is actually made up of a series of eight waterfalls that all cascade down nearby cliff-faces. Since they are all within such close proximity to one another, the area surrounding their base is frequently shrouded with mist and the splashing water can cause rainbows to appear when the sun is shining.

Huangguoshu Waterfall

It is 74 metres (243 ft.) high and 81 metres (266 ft.) wide, making it the largest waterfall in China. It is actually a cluster of waterfalls and is named after the largest waterfall of the cluster, Huangguoshu Waterfall, but also contains Doupotang Waterfall, Luositan Waterfall, Spider Cave Waterfall, Lumei Pond Waterfall, and Longmen Flying Waterfall, to name but a few. Each of these waterfalls has its own unique charm, but Huangguoshu Waterfall is undoubtedly the most magnificent. This cluster of waterfalls is located on the Baishui River and is about 45 kilometres southwest of Anshun City, Guizhou. It is more often referred to as Huangguoshu Waterfall National Park.

Highlights

Ziyun Getu River Scenic Spot

Surrounded by Karst mountains and embedded with hidden caves, the Ziyun Getu River Scenic Spot is a paradise for nature lovers. It is arguably most well-known for three main sightseeing areas: the Swallow Cave, the Chuangshang Cave, and the Blind Valley.

In-keeping with its name, the Swallow Cave is home to thousands of nesting swallows that can be seen flying in and out of the cave, particularly at sunrise and sunset when they head out to gather food or come home to roost for the night. The Chuangshang Cave, by contrast, is actually an underground tunnel that has a section of the Getu River running through it!

At the end of the Chuangshang Cave lies a glass elevator that carries visitors all the way up to the Blind Valley. This ancient valley has been protected by the surrounding mountains for hundreds of years and is home to a primitive forest that is packed with rare plant species.

Highlights

Mount Fanjing

The name “Fanjing” is actually an abbreviation of the term “Fantian Jingtú” (梵天淨土), which refers to the Pure Land within Buddhist scripture that is supposedly ruled by the heavenly king Brahma. It should come as no surprise that Mount Fanjing thus ranks as one of the most sacred Buddhist mountains in China. Alongside being named after the Pure Land, it is also reputed to be bodhimaṇḍa, the place in which one reaches enlightenment, for the Maitreya Buddha.

As well as its spiritual pedigree, this sprawling mountain range is famed for its biodiversity and is inhabited by a number of rare species, including the Guizhou golden monkey, the Chinese giant salamander, forest musk deer, and Reeve’s pheasant. Journeying through the mountain’s wild forests and passing by its venerable old temples is like taking a step into a fairytale wonderland.

Loushang Ancient Village

Much like Qingyan, the ancient village of Loushang was established during the Ming Dynasty (1368-1644) and boasts a history that stretches back for over 500 years. This quaint village is connected by a network of 2,000 metres (6,500 ft.) of paved roads that are designed in the shape of the character “shou” (寿), which translates to mean “longevity” and expresses the wishes of those who constructed the village that its locals may enjoy a long life.

Since the village has yet to be developed for tourism, it represents an ancient slice of calm within the mountains of Guizhou province. Perhaps its only claim to fame is that it is a popular resting spot for Siberian white cranes, which can often be spotted at the entrance to the village.

Highlights

The Zhijin Cave National Geopark

With its ethereal splendour and strangely beautiful rock formations, Zhijin Cave has often been described as a vast underground palace and appears to have been torn straight from the pages of a fairytale. In fact, the name “zhijin” literally translates to mean “weaving gold,” which should give you some idea as to how beautiful this cave system is. Located in the small village of Minzhai, Zhijin Cave is a karst cave that is 173 metres (568 ft.) wide and 150 metres (492 ft.) tall at its largest point. To put that into perspective, you could fit the entire Statue of Liberty into its largest cavern with plenty of room to spare!

What makes this cave system particularly special is that it is home to a dizzying array of karst formations and has even earned the nickname of the “Karst Museum.” Over forty different types of karst formations can be found throughout the cave system, which makes it reasonably unique amongst karst cave networks. In particular, it is home to rare karst formations made from semiolite, prehnite, and bloodstone, which endows the interior of the cave with a variety of magical shapes and colours. The sharp stalactites hanging from the ceiling and the piercing stalagmites rising from the floor give the interior of the cave an entrancing alien appearance. Read more about Zhijin Cave.

Highlights

Fenghuang Ancient Town

The name “Fenghuang” literally translates to mean “Phoenix”, which in Chinese tradition is associated with good fortune and longevity. Its most unique feature is undoubtedly its wooden diaojiailou, which perch delicately over the river. The incorporation of the river into the town’s layout demonstrates how important it is to the villagers to live in harmony with nature. It is not uncommon to see women washing clothes or men casting their fishing nets into its expanse, much like they have done for centuries. Boatmen wait by the banks, offering visitors the chance to enjoy a scenic cruise up and down the river.

the vast majority of Fenghuang’s population is made up of Miao and Tujia people. Miao traditions, architecture, and culture dominate the town, from their elegant traditional dress to their intricate handicrafts. Read more about *Fenghuang Ancient Town*.

Hibiscus Town

Originally known as the village of Wang or Wangcun, Hibiscus Town was renamed in 2007 due to its inclusion as a set in the wildly popular Chinese film Hibiscus Town. The film, which was originally made in 1986, follows the struggles of a peasant woman named Hu Yuyin after she is labelled a "new rich peasant" and it is widely regarded as the most famous Chinese film about the Cultural Revolution. The town itself has a history stretching back over 2,000 years ago and has been the home of the Tujia ethnic minority for centuries. Its greatest claim to fame, however, is undoubtedly the Furong Waterfall, which is located within the town itself. This 60-metre (197 ft.) tall waterfall forms a focal part of the landscape in the town and the soothing sound of the cascading waters can supposedly be heard from over 16 kilometres (10 mi) away! Alongside the waterfall, the town is dotted with beautifully preserved traditional architecture that is sure to transport you back in time.

Stay overnight inside a Karst mountain

After admiring some of the stunning Karst landforms China has to offer, do you want to get to know them a little better? How about sleeping inside of a Karst cave?

The huge camping cave we will use is situated deep within the centre of a mountain. From the mouth of the cave, we'll be able to enjoy a magnificent view of the surrounding countryside. You may be surprised to hear that this Karst cave has two storeys inside! The ground floor of the cave has been kept in its natural condition. We will have our dinner there with the local Bouyei people, who will welcome us by singing beautiful folk songs and offering us their homemade wine! Traditionally, you would have to choose between drinking the wine or singing a song back to them. Don't worry if you can't drink or sing, however, as they won't be offended.

The second storey has been built using a wooden frame and has a wooden floor. Although it may not provide the most authentic experience, it helps to keep the camping area clean and flat, which in turn makes it more comfortable. After our long day of hiking, we all deserve a soft bed to sleep in, so you'll be delighted to find that your "camp bed" isn't like a normal camp bed. Before we have dinner, it is a good choice of sitting in a chair, gaze out at the surrounding landscape, and drink some tea (or some beer, if you prefer!).

Itinerary

Meals Included: A welcome dinner together made up of Chongqing cuisine.

Please Note:

*We will arrange two airport pick-ups during the day: one at midday and one in the evening. It is more beautiful at night, since you can watch the shimmering colours of the surrounding neon lights on the water. Then let's soak in the vibrant nightlife of the city in Hongyadong, where we can engage with local Chongqing culture. Hongyadong has a history that stretches back over 2,000 years, making it one of the oldest and most venerable sites in the city of Chongqing. It was originally used as a military fortress when the region was ruled by the ancient State of Ba (1046-256 BC) and continued to be used in this capacity right up until the Qing Dynasty (1644-1911).

Nowadays, its most striking feature is an 11-storey stilt house that abuts the steep cliff-face and is said to resemble the hauntingly beautiful Diaolou of Guangdong province. Standing at an impressive 75 metres (245 ft.) in height, this building is so large that it even contains a small waterfall, which trickles down the rocky cliff-face and can be seen on the building's second floor.

Hongyadong is also the most popular place for street food and traditional Chongqing cuisine. You will be free to explore the area at your leisure and sample any of the food that catches your eye.
